Antiresorptive medications, such as bisphosphonates, are the mainstay of current treatment. However, they fail to stimulate bone formation and therefore, treatment for these patients is of limited duration. The epidermal growth factor receptor (EGFR) is expressed in various tissues including bone. These receptors are localized in both osteoblasts and osteoclasts. EGFR and its ligand, transforming growth factor-alpha (TGF-alpha), have been shown to have important functions in bone metabolism and tissue regeneration. Animal models have been used to show that increased EGFR activity is associated with increased bone formation, suggesting that this receptor may be a potential target for the treatment of osteoporosis. Phase I and II clinical trials are currently in progress to investigate the effects of the EGFR inhibitor, AG1478, on bone mass in postmenopausal women. This article reviews the possible role of EGFR in the pathogenesis and treatment of osteoporosis.Residents of Arkansas and
