Anna-Lisa AAct 3.8.6 Test 2 Portable AAct 3.8.6 Test 2 Portable Portable When the two are ready to graduate, and their parent or parents are able to afford the cost of supporting their child, a "pocket allowance" (or "pocket money") is introduced. This is most often referred to in the United States as an allowance, and usually consists of 10 to 100 dollars per week. It is a form of incentive (often called a "reward" or a "bonus") to encourage children to participate in extracurricular activities. Development "Pocket money" was a slang term for money paid by parents to their children. It is thought to have been coined in the United States in the middle of the 19th century. The term "pocket money" appears in literature in the US in 1856, in Thackeray's novel Esmond (1859) and in a New York Times (3 June 1856) article referring to 18-year-old granddaughter Dorothy Carnegie, who had been given a "pocket money of three hundred and fifty dollars" (New York Times. 3 June 1856: 4). The phrase "pocket money" was used by the British schoolmaster (and Unitarian) John Stuart Mill in the nineteenth century in a discussion in Mill's major work, On Liberty, of the respective rights of parents and children. Mill said that the "whole of the responsibility of children... should rest upon parents, with only such pocket- money as may be prescribed, for objects for which a separate competence is desired, but not required." A child wishing to have pocket money is often told to think of it as a gift which they should use for extra-curricular activities to make up for their family's lack of financial support. When parents pay for their children's pocket money, the money is usually spent on activities, particularly sports and leisure activities. Pocket money may include or be separate from the child allowance, which may be 10 to 100 dollars per week. It is most often referred to in the United States as an allowance, but may refer to any amount of money given to a child. In the US, in contrast with allowances, the money given to the child is not always spent on activities outside of work. Instead, families traditionally take on a number of activities for the benefit of their children, such as paying for summer camp, tuition, tutoring, and private
