doesn't rule out rerun Wed, Apr 28, 2016 - 7:00 AM
[VIENTIANE] Ailing Doan Nguon, the widow of Vietnamese billionaire tycoon Nguyen Van Mau, is not ruling out the possibility of another run at the presidential race. The former interior minister and rural development official is one of two women vying for the country's first female president in a multi-candidate field which has been heavily criticised as sexist. Nguon, 76, an 84-year-old grandmother-of-four who spent more than two decades at the helm of a shrimp processing plant, is the longest-serving current member of the Communist Party's central executive committee. But she faces criticism that an over-reliance on party support could hinder her campaign, especially with her inability to campaign effectively due to a hernia. Vietnam changed its electoral laws last year to allow for a second vote for voters whose original choice was not valid. However, the two candidates to watch in the vote on July 30 are Hochiminh City deputy mayor Nguyen Thi Kim Ngan and Doan Thi Huong, the daughter of another billionaire tycoon whose backing has been criticised for being overly political and non-personal.

Ngan and Huong are behind the “Rose Revolution” moniker over what many saw as a grassroots movement against Vietnam’s former party boss
