What's New In?

As a base conclusion, cFos Notifier can easily keep you updated with the latest messages and posts on your Twitter accounts, by working in the System Tray and displaying popup notifications whenever you receive a new tweet or someone posts something on your wall. Ketchup.app — Allow tracking and automatic posting of your social media feeds directly to your Twitter, Facebook and Google+ accounts from within any other application. See and Share.app — Allows you to see and share every trackable data point on your iPhone or iPad by an URL and Twitter account. Inbound Links.app — Keeps track of any website you open on your iOS device and automatically uploads them to your social media accounts. Downtime.app — Provides push notifications when your iOS device loses or recovers network connectivity. AppLock — Allows you to secure and lock any application on your iOS device to your social media accounts. Shout.app — An easy way to post anything you see, do, or say to Twitter. Show case: ===== Typing on the iPhone can be a chore, whether you have an iPhone or an iPad. Thankfully, you don't have to hit every single character on the screen; there's a built-in iPhone keyboard that you can use to type almost anything, including text messages and Facebook comments. If you're using a long-form SMS app like the famed iMessage, you may want to switch to the iPhone keyboard for typing in those messages. And while you're at it, you can switch to the built-in keyboard for browsing on Safari too. You can change the type of keyboard you use by going to Settings > General > Keyboard > Keyboards. But that's only one of the ways to switch to the built-in iPhone keyboard. There are two more ways to do it as well. The first is to go to the keyboard settings. How to turn off the iPhone keyboard: ----- Tap on the keyboard icon on the top bar of the home screen. Tap on Keyboard, then Swipe to the right on the keyboard to turn it off. You can also set it to open automatically after a certain amount of time, set it to show a toolbar on top of the keyboard, and remove the keyboard entirely by long-pressing the Home button. How to change the keyboard type: ----- In addition to the settings described above, you can also switch to the iPhone keyboard by selecting it from the list on the iPhone Settings screen. You can also use VoiceOver to switch between the traditional, QWERTY keyboard, the standard, QWERTZ keyboard and the Dvorak keyboard, which, of course, uses letters that are used most often on the iPhone. Finally, you can change the keyboard type directly from within an app. To do
