Q: Install.NET framework on Dell Desktop? I was downloading all Microsoft.NET Framework, but I can't find it on Dell desktop. Can you please tell me where to download it? A: First, you'll have to setup an appropriate domain, for which you'll have to contact your Windows Admin. To do that, boot a Windows 7 cd or USB of a known good machine (usually located in the administration CD/DVD's), and login with a local user. In the search bar, type "domain" and press Enter. You'll probably be asked to create a new domain (maybe your server is already running) or choose an existing domain. That's the case if you use DHCP. To be able to do that, you need to know which IP your server uses and it's most probably 192.168.0.x. In the domain, click on advanced features. In advanced settings, you can configure the following: Credentials Dial-up networking protocol IP address Windows Internet name server (WINS) Domain name system (DNS) Tunneling After that, create your DNS zone so it can find your domain name. A: You need to install the .NET Framework on a server. You can't install it on a desktop machine. This is not usually done automatically when you install Windows. If you are able to determine the version of .NET required to run the application, you'll have to do this manually. You probably need to contact your IT department to get a server running .NET. .NET is an optional installation on servers such as Exchange and SQL.
