For maximum control, open Photoshop in a window — it has a more comfortable look and feel and is much easier to work with than a separate application. Figure 2-1: What it takes to master the skills of Photoshop. When I say windows, I mean the windows that look like a grid of nine squares along the top of the screen, as shown in the Figure 2-1 image. Creating and Manipulating Layers A Photoshop file has layers. Each layer can be made up of different objects or even of different colors. Understanding how to create layers and use them appropriately is an important aspect to becoming a skilled Photoshop user. To create a new layer, first select the layer you want to create the new layer from and then click the New Layer icon. (In Figure 2-1, the layer I created is the one right above the Magic Wand layer.) You can create a new layer with any of the following options: By using the New Layer icon in the Layers palette. By using the keyboard shortcuts Ctrl+Shift+N or Ctrl+Option+N. By using the keyboard shortcuts Opt+Shift+N or Opt+Option+N. By moving your mouse to the New Layer icon on the Layers palette and clicking it to bring up the New Layer dialog box. By using the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+N (cursor keys down and enter). By using the keyboard shortcut Shift+F or F2. The keyboard shortcuts in the preceding list are keyboard-only options because the shortcuts must be used in conjunction with a mouse click. However, some users prefer to use their keyboard alone rather than a mouse, particularly if using a notebook. To get started, you must first add a new object to a new layer. To add an object to a new layer, click and drag the object from one layer to the new layer and then release the object. After creating a new layer, you can manipulate the objects on that layer with the tools located in the layers palette. Locating the layers palette The Layers palette is a drop-down menu containing all the layers in the current Photoshop document. You can do a number of things with the Layers palette, such as add objects to an existing layer or edit the objects on an existing layer. The palette has six tabs for easy access to a collection of tools and features, as shown in Figure

Q: Symfony2 : Creating twig form element using external library I'm writing an application in Symfony 2.3. I'm trying to create a form for exemple like this `{{ form_widget(form.numeraire, {'attr': {'id': 'form_input'}}) }}` There's a Twig extension that can do that but I'm unable to use it :/ My question is : is it possible to do the same thing but with a free library? I was able to work with jquery, and it's very easy but I got stuck. Here's the library I use : A: As far as I know, this is impossible with libs such as this one, they use native javascript functions. If you don't use libs such as this one, it's simple and thus, easy to reverse engineer, but if you do use it, it's only a few lines of code to do what you want to do.

News and information NASA astronaut could travel to Mars by 2030 NASA is making preparations to send its first human mission to Mars in the 2030s, according to a report from SpaceNews.com. Scientists at NASA have recently made an important breakthrough in the path to human missions to Mars. The technology that NASA will use to send astronauts to the red planet will essentially be the same as the technology NASA is using to send astronauts to the International Space Station right now. NASA is primarily interested in the technology part of the equation, SpaceNews reports, and believes that once it has the technology then Mars will be at reach. "We're looking at going into the 2030s and we have designed systems that would allow us to go to Mars," Jackie Lutz, the deputy associate administrator of NASA's Space Technology Mission Directorate, told SpaceNews. The only way of astronauts going to Mars is by using private spacecraft. In addition, NASA is already working with the private space industry in order to make missions to space cheaper and easier to make. NASA is well aware of the importance of private spacecraft, and is planning to send humans to Mars as soon as the private sector can take care of them. "There is a symbiotic relationship with the private sector in going to Mars," Lutz said.

The EcoStraw 50 insulates significantly better than a control straw plus an artificial fibre and is cost-effective for new and retrofit insulation applications. Drexel Properties in South Shields, UK recently commissioned the research to determine the best straw insulation for new and retrofit insulation applications. Based on the findings, EcoStraw® 50 is judged to be the best because it is the most effective over a wide range of building situations. Key findings from the study show that EcoStraw 50: is 20 per cent less permeable than an average building straw provides similar, if not better, thermal properties than a conventional building straw provides around 30 per cent more thermal protection is much
