The instrument is used by the surgeon to either cut tissue or to grasp and manipulate tissue. During a surgical procedure, the surgeon must wash his hands several times, often more than twenty times, throughout the surgery. The surgeon will need to take several moments to wash his hands and dry them, during which time the surgical procedure will not proceed. The surgeon will also need to request that a scrub nurse or surgical assistant wash and dry his hands before he can begin the next surgical step. Since these steps are not performed at a surgical console, the surgeon must be out of the way while the hands of the assistant or scrub nurse are being cleaned. This could mean that the surgical operation will be delayed until the hands of the assistant or scrub nurse are cleaned. It is therefore desirable to provide a means for a surgical instrument with a cleanable handpiece or cleaning element to clean the hands of the surgical assistant or scrub nurse. It is further desirable to provide a means for the instrument to be cleaned and re-used to avoid the need for
