Monday, April 18, 2016 [CPM - UK] Man at the Center: Louise Brown (1974 -) Louise Brown was born in Preston in Lancashire, England on August 21, 1974. She is a single mother and used a sperm bank to conceive her daughter. She wanted a different kind of child so did not want to use the sperm of the man she got pregnant with. Hence she tried to conceive a child using the sperm of an unknown donor. Louise also got to know the name of the donor and was surprised to hear that he was the name of the famous doctor who developed in vitro fertilization in 1959, Dr Robert G. Edwards. Louise Brown developed in vitro fertilization (IVF) or egg fertilization in the laboratory where the fertilized eggs are implanted to the uterus of the mother. Hence Louise became pregnant and had her baby in 1991 through in vitro fertilization. She named her daughter Louise Charlotte Brown in honor of the doctor and his development of in vitro fertilization. In her motherhood, Louise faced many problems in raising a child. She had very bad mood swings and could not understand the problems of the new child. In fact, the child was being "stolen" from her and it took time to get used to her new role as a parent. Louise's mother died from cancer at the age of 52. Louise decided to end her marriage and try to stay committed to her child. The day she gave birth to Louise was the day she divorced and she was 28 years old. Louise decided to keep her child out of wedlock and she was not ready to have children. She was not interested in having any more children. She wanted to do something for children like helping them to find a cure for asthma which is a condition she suffered from in her childhood. Louise is now happily married to Chris Brown
