◆ Performed better than expected. Incredibly detailed. Varied visual effects. My hometown was beautiful. ◆ Can't wait for the next time. Fun difficulty progression, and addictive. Great battle scenes. Strange story. You can touch even a single pixel with an input device, and the game helps you to discover the mystery hidden within. ◆ My wife is weird. I didn't know what to do. A highly immersive experience. Ten hours isn't enough. Some of the game scenes are hard to understand. A rather rare day. ◆ Easy to play. A rare day. Nice fantasy world. Enemies are difficult to beat. I love the protagonist. Music is good. The vibe is strange. Peaceful no matter how challenging. You have nowhere to escape.1. Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to radar search and track systems for automatically detecting the presence of a target and then providing a tracking of that target over a predetermined time period. More specifically, this invention relates to a radar system for providing rapid and repeated target detection and tracking at a lower signal to noise ratio than is possible with conventional radar systems. 2. Description of the Prior Art The prior art, in particular the patent to Szanto, U.S. Pat. No. 4,111,373, is directed to an on-going process of continuous, real-time integration of target information as is generated from a receiving antenna for subsequent transmission to at least one display terminal. This process is referred to as ground moving target indication (GMTI), and in that it is a part of the general field of radar the invention heretofore known is directed to a system for achieving a particularly high density of GMTI with a wide range of pass bands, and allowing a true simultaneous display of the actual and hypothesized positions of multiple moving targets. The field of ground moving target indication has a number of commercial and military applications, and a number of problems as have been set forth in the prior art have been solved by providing the instant invention. In practical terms, the use of ground moving target indication for a high power scanning radar and intercept mission is indispensable. At the low power levels at which the real mission is conducted, the high signal to noise ratio obtained from the use of a relatively large aperture antenna is lost. The apparatus of the invention allows the adaptation to the lower power levels at which a mission is conducted, both in efficiency as well as in continued mission performance. bff6bb2d33

The solitude during winter is quite challenging for me. I don't know the right words to describe how cold can be, but I think this image conveys my feeling fairly well. Many times I went out into the snow during the winter to check on the survival of my frail, hardy cousins. When they were okay for one day I enjoyed the silence and the silence was the first sound I could hear only when I was happy - I could hear the birds chirping, the cicadas, the wind blowing the woods.<
