Using a longitudinal study design, this study explored 2 factors thought to influence developmental change in self-regulation skills following adoption: (a) the experience of tension, as described by Sroufe and Egeland (1996), and (b) the need to self-regulate, as described by the Behavioral Systems Integration (BSI) model (Cook & Mineka, 1998). Self-regulation was assessed at 2 time points from 7 months to 5 years of age as children transitioned to school. Results indicated that children with a greater opportunity to engage in self-regulation exhibited better self-regulation and showed less tension, while those who lacked opportunities to self-regulate exhibited greater tension, a diminished ability to regulate and showed more anger and sadness. These results suggest that the experience of tension and the need to self-regulate are interrelated processes that may underlie the maintenance of self-regulatory skills. Riegler, W. Hütter, and J. Women's Under-19
Championship The 2006
UEFA Women's Under-19 Championship (also known as UEFA Women's Under-19 Championship 2006) was the seventh edition of UEFA's latest women's under-19 football competition. The tournament was held in Azerbaijan between 19
June and 26 June 2006. It also acted as the qualification stage for the 2007 FIFA Women's World Youth Championship. Germany won their second UEFA Women's Under-19 Championship, having beaten England in a penalty shoot-out on a final day that saw Spain win the CIS (Central Asian Republics), Sweden and Belarus tie for second place. They thus qualified as the UEFA/FIFA confederation representatives to the FIFA U-20 Women's World Cup. Qualification

Venues Draw The final tournament was split into four groups of four teams. The games were played in individual venues across Baku, and each group was contested as a round-robin mini-tournament.

The draw for the competition was held on 30 April 2006 at Istanbul Technical University.
