It's a.Q: How to turn down an offer without fear of loss of job I was offered an unpaid internship in India, but the position sounded more like an entry-level job, and did not sound like a real internship. I want to turn down the offer, but I want to make sure I won't lose my job, because I already quit that job to move out here to do an internship. I was offered the internship as a way to have a good resume and network with employers, as I have no experience or work to show. However, I know the internship will not be as good as a paid job, and I want to make sure I'm not forcing my boss to have to hire me for an entry-level job in the US. Is it possible to turn down an offer without fear of losing a job? A: It's really easy to get an uncomfortable job. Especially when you start. With that in mind it is possible to get an unpaid position and then jump right into a paid job. Just make
